Ivory, carnelian, tiger's eye, gold
 Poets are creatures of habit, you know
 But beauty that kindles a song or a story
 Is surely old hat to you now

Tidal waves, tears, and the taste of ice cream
 I lift up my veils and you show me your seams
 We'll take on the guises of all of our dreams
 In a dance bold and soft as a vow

We can be anything, anything
 We can be anything
 We can be anything

And your name is all crystal and sweet violin
 When your fingers trace silent brocades on my skin
 And the whole of my world is a mischievous grin
 Looking up at the stars in your eyes

Summer is taken, oh, quite by surprise
 By the autumn, and winter was never this warm
 And I stand open-handed and soaked in your storm

I'll be your ingénue, you'll be my king

We can be anything, anything
 We can be anything
 We can be anything

And I'll fly through the snow and I'll stay up all night
 Tie me in silk and hold on to me tighter
 I'll try and I'll try until I get it right
 And by touch mend the tears in my words

Teach me the language of angles and curves
 But don't tell the secret you see in my face
 When you watch me through layers of velvet and lace

You'll be the goddess, and I'll be the raven who sings

We can be anything
 We can be anything
 We can be anything
 We can be anything
